What's Happening: In your retina you have 3 types of color receptors (cones) that are most sensitive to either red, blue or green. When you stare at a particular color for too long, these receptors get tired. When you then look at a neutral background, the tired receptors don’t work as well. The information from the different color receptors is out of balance and you see the color "afterimages."